WRITING TASK

Fahrenheit 451 depicts a future dystopian American society where books are considered forbidden and “firemen” are charged with burning any that are found. This literary work makes us wonder of how the world would have been without the free access to knowledge and information.

To start with, knowledge is critical to the self-realization of the human beings. By having free access to information, they can develop their critical thinking, form their own opinion on a subject, express and defend freely their own beliefs. The fact that different opinions are heard, discussed and finally respected, is what makes the society evolve and move forward to a more democratic level of being. Free access to knowledge constitutes the cornerstone to the creation of a great civilization.

Therefore, taking all this into consideration, were I to live in such dystopian society, I would feel suffocated. The educational system as we know it, would not exist. People would lead a monotonous life without a single grain of creativity and inspiration. This society would be stagnant. Needless to say that such communities would be a toy in the hands of totalitarian governments who would take advantage of the ignorance of the citizens.

In conclusion, access to knowledge and information represents more than just a human right. It is considered a necessity of utmost importance since human beings are characterized by vigilance, creativity and rebellious spirit which in essence means that without information, their spirit and intellectual capacities will cease to exist.
